FABULOUS FACTS

ABOUT LIGHTNING

LIGHTNING IS A ROD OF ELECTRICITY THAT PASSES BETWEEN THE PARTS OF THE CLOUD, FROM ONE CLOUD TO ANOTHER, OR BETWEEN THE CLOUDS AND THE GROUND.

A BOLT OF LIGHTNING TRAVELS APPROXIMATELY 300,000 MPH. IT'S 300,000,000 VOLTS AND 100,000,000,000 WATTS OF POWER.

LIGHTNING IS NOT ALWAYS WHITE, IT IS SOMETIMES RED, YELLOW OR ROSE.

WHEN A FLASH OF LIGHTNING AND A CLAP OF THUNDER OCCUR AT THE SAME TIME, THAT'S BECAUSE THE SPEED OF LIGHT IS 186,000 MILES PER SECOND, WHILE THE SPEED OF SOUND IS ONLY 1,100 FEET PER SECOND.

THE MOST POWERFUL LIGHTNING BOLT EVER RECORDED WAS 200,000,000 VOLTS.

THUNDER OCCURS IN WINTER, LIGHTNING OCCURS IN THE SUMMER. DURING WINTER THUNDERSTORMS, SPREAD OUTSIDE AND ON CLEAR DAYS.

THE MOST POWERFUL LIGHTNING BOLT EVER RECORDED WAS 200,000,000 VOLTS.

LIGHTNING DOES STRIKE TREES AND SOMETIMES KILLS THEM IN ONE PLACE.

EVIL BEYOND THE SUN

A Jan Jan Adventure

By Ewald Binder

THE chief of the Space Patrol spoke gravely to Lieutenant Jan Jan. "You understand, of course, that you may never come back from Alpha Centauri?"

Jon nodded. "I understand. But I'll go, sir."

The chief went on. "Alpha Centauri is the nearest star to our solar system. Yet it's over four light years away—with trillion miles! With our ordinary ships it would take 4 years at the speed of light—386,000 miles a second!—to get there! But with this special Overdrive ship, you'll exceed the speed of light. That means it works!"

Jon added again, in the implied warning.

"We can't risk more than one life," the chief continued. "You'll make the first test flight—the first attempt in history to reach another star. Good luck, son!"

They gripped hands silently. There was no fan-fare, no ballyhoo. The result might be failure again. Other ships had tried and none succeeded. Only the chief and a few of his aides were witnesses as Jon Jan stepped in the ship and rocketed away from earth.

Three days later, Jon passed Pluto and the solar system began to shrink and recede behind him. Now was the time for the miraculous Overdrive. It was designed to whip space ahead of his ship and allow the craft to reach fantastic speeds.

Jon held his breath for a moment—then jerked the lever.

Would the ship blow up? Or turn to cosmic vapor? Or crack open like an egg-shell? Nobody knew. This was the first test of the new Overdrive.

The ship leaped ahead like a runaway comet, almost tearing Jon from his elastic straps. His mind spun dizzily. But he fixed his eyes on the velocimeter and saw the miracle happen.

The ship reached 24,000 miles per second—then 100,000—150,000—and suddenly Jon Jan was going faster than light—over 200,000 miles a second!

"It works!" Jon breathed—thankfully.

He pulled the lever to its limit and saw incredible speed recorded by the meter. First it was twice as fast as light, then ten times, and finally 100 times faster than light! That was the Overdrive's limit. But still, at that stupendous speed, it would take 14 days to reach the nearest star!

Ahead, Alpha Centauri grew steadily in brightness as the days passed. On the 15th day, Jan was near enough to see the three separate stars of the Centauri System. Unlike solitary Sol, Centauri was a triple star.

Jon cut the overdrive. Now, looking back, he could see earth's sun—but only as a dim yellow star remote in space. Jon felt chilled and thrilled at the same time. Chilled to be so awfully far from home. Thrilled to be the first known human being to cross interstellar space and reach a neighboring star!

Using his ship telescope Jon searched the vicinity and came to the conclusion that there was only one Centaurian planet. One planet for three stars. Did that planet hold intelligent beings?

Jon shook his head disappointedly after circling the planet. Not a sign of color or people. It seemed to be a barren, uninhabited world. Jan landed in a stretch of sun-baked sand. Strangely enough, the air was breathable. Jon stepped out and almost fainted as the hot blast of the triple stars hit him. Three suns poured down their withering rays.

And when Jon looked around, he saw three separate shadows of himself! Odd world indeed.

Jon started suddenly, as he saw other shadows, moving toward him. His eyes widened as strange, grinning men were approaching him. Strange men of Centauri with huge thick bodies and wizen faces blending high intelligence with ruthless brutality. Jon knew they would be enemies from the first moment.

"Stop!" Jon shouted, even though they could not understand. But he waved his ray gun at the same time. They could not mistake that gesture.

Surprisingly, words came back that Jon could understand.

"Do not be surprised," one Centaurian spoke. "We long ago mastered telepathy. We are using our own language, but the telepathic meaning goes directly to your brain. We can read your mind, too. You are from Sol, our nearest neighbor star. How did you get here?"

"A special faster-than-light engine," Jon said calmly. "But where do you people live? I saw no cities."

The Centaurian pointed down. "Underground. The triple sun long ago forced us to seek cool depths. This is a harsh world to live on. I see in your mind that your sun has nine planets and many moons—cool and habitable."

The Centaurian squarred and then, so suddenly that it shocked Jon to the roots of his being, he blandly said—"So we will take your ship, make more, and migrate to your solar system?"

Jon like death!

Jon laughed grimly. "Suppose we don't want you?"

THE answer was cold and ruthless.

"Your people couldn't stop us. We are powerful—strong—and we read minds. We conquered and killed all several other races that ever lived on this world. And one of them was very much like you—a puny wraddling race. Now we will take your ship."

They advanced. Jon pulled in warning, but they kept coming. Jon shot his ray gun, spraying them all with its fiery lurch.

But they kept coming!

"I told you we were powerful," roared the Centaurian leader. "Our bodies are made of dense, packed molecules. No ordinary weapon can even scratch us. And we have far more physical weight and power than you—can!"

As the last word, reaching Jon, the Centaurian merely flung his head against Jon's chest. It was like the blow of an elephant. Jon spun through the air and landed heavily, almost headless and dead.

The Centaurians now ignored him and stopped eagerly toward the ship.

Staggering to his feet, Jon's mind knew panic and horror. If they succeeded in duplicating the Overdrive, their heavy creatures could swarm to earth. And with their tremendous powers, they would win out in any war. The solar system would be invaded—conquered—enslaved—decimated!

Jon called his gun again. Instar Juggard. There was only one thing to do—destroy the engine! One well-placed shot would make it explode. Jon would be marooned—never to return to Earth—but what chance was there?

Jon knew—to destroy his only chance of escape.

But one Centaurian whirled an instant before and flung his body in the way, taking the shot, protecting the engine. Then he leaped and easily wrested the gun from Jon's hand.

"You were going to destroy the engine," the Centaurian snapped. "I caught your thought just in time. But we want the engine." Before Jon's eyes, he broke the ray gun in half as easily as snapping a twig. "Now, Earthman, you will take me up in the ship and show me how to run it. After that, you will die."

Jon was flung into the ship. One Centaurian followed him and the hatch slammed shut. Jon was forced to take off with the ship as the enemy took in every move he made, learning how the ship operated.

A slow glow of hope came into Jon's eyes. They were out in open space now, far from the Centaurian planet. Already Jon could feel the peculiar floating sensation as gravity let go.

Jon hoped grimly at the Centaurian, feet pounding.

"You fool!" spat the alien. "Must I break every bone in your puny body to teach you a lesson?"

Jon staggered under a return blow, but came to his feet grinning. "I'm going to teach you a lesson—a lesson about space and gravity."

FOURTEEN days later, Jon Jari shot all the Overdrive. The glorious sight of the six and nine glowing planets lay before him. He was home again. And behind him was the Centaurian—dead.

Back on Earth, Jon reported his Centaurian adventure in full to the chief. "And after I defeated him," Jon concluded, "the Centaurian killed himself, tortured by disgrace!"

"But how did you defeat him?" gasped the chief. "He had ten times your strength and weight!"

"Not in space," interrupted Jon. "Weight is a result of gravity. But in space there is no gravity. That took away all his weight and left me on equal terms with him—man to man. I threw the book at him—boxing, jujitsu and judo. It was close—but I won!"

Jon Jari tossed his face up to the bright star that was Alpha Centauri. "The best trip mankind ever made—to that star—and for me at least, the best."
